“You don't understand how I'm feeling now. I don't want you to come to the athletic meet,” I told my mother. She looked surprised to hear that. I didn't want to say those bad things to her, but the words came out of my mouth. My mother said, “OK. I won't go, but please eat dinner before it becomes cold,” and she left my room. That night, I went to bed early without dinner.

The next morning, my mother and I didn't say anything at breakfast. My father asked me, “Did you have a fight last night with your mother?”

During my practice that day, my teacher came to me and said, “Your mother was brought to the hospital just now. You should go to the hospital.”

On the bus to the hospital, I could only think about my mother. It began to rain hard, and my eyes filled with tears at the same time. “Mother became sick because I told her bad things,” I thought.

After practicing one day, I said to Tomoe, “The third-year members are very kind. When we can't play basketball well, they always teach us how to play better. I like them and I want to play together with them to win the games in July.” “Me too,” she answered.

Two weeks before the games, the basketball teacher said the names of the regular players in front of every member in the gym. Almost all the regular players were third-year members. There were only a few second-year members who became regular players, and I was one of them! Tomoe came to me and said, “That's wonderful, Ayaka.” I was very happy to hear that. She also said, “I'm not a regular player, but I will do everything I can do for the team.”

When we were practicing that day, I felt down. I felt a pain in my ankle and I couldn't stand up. Everyone came to help me. The teacher took care of my ankle and said, “You should go to the doctor.” Then he called my mother. After a while, she came and took me to the doctor. The doctor said, “You have to stop playing basketball for a month.” I was very sad.

The next morning, Tomoe asked me, “How is your ankle, Ayaka?” “I can't play basketball for a month,” I answered. She said, “Don't be sad, Ayaka. You can't play this time, but I'm sure you can play as a regular player next time.” “No, next time means nothing to me,” I said and went away from her.
